

Poor Credit Loans

Thursday, 25 September 2008

Getting poor credit loans could be very trying especially when one does not have a job in the current run. Some scammers may call you for an interview over your phone. You may attend a couple of them in your dire need for money.

I would like to warn you of scammers offering poor credit loans especially pre-approved ones. They would have tracked your number somehow. In most cases, never answer anonymous loan offers. At least I use some extra caution when such people call me for loans.

I would never give in my personal information or exact details of my requirement when I have to answer such calls. I would get the contact details of the company, address of the company offering me poor credit loans over the phone, and also their contact number.

Then, I would do the extra homework of calling them back again relating to poor credit loans I require. By doing this, I track back the reliability of the company by someone answering my needs to the point. It would just cost the telephone bill. Then, I would check their reliability on the internet. This little caution can save lots of time and energy with scammers and in many stances identity fraud!
